Measures taken to prevent destruction	Measures planned to prevent destruction
Continuous efforts to minimize unsold products by developing commercially strong and long-lasting designs that match customer demand. Focus has been on aligning stock levels with customer demand to support efficient resource use and minimize the risk of unsold products. Furthermore, continuous work is carried out to optimize product quality and durability, ensuring products remain in use for as long as possible. Bolia also works with component-based design principles, enabling the replacement of individual parts and supporting product repair and lifetime extension. Products with minor defects or damaged packaging are sold through Bolia's online outlet to help prevent product destruction.	It is planned to further strengthen inventory management and demand forecasting to reduce the risk of unsold products. In addition, the company aims to secure new waste streams by increasing the share of products sold through its online outlet and expand donation initiatives, helping products with minor defects or surplus stock find continued use and extending their lifespan. Furthermore, it is planned to further expand the use of component-based design across both new and existing products to enhance reparability, facilitate replacement of individual components.
