

Bolia gets a brand new workspace

The company's headquarters in Aarhus, Denmark, was completely redesigned, renovated, and connected by a walkway to all-new premises in the adjacent building. Bolia adapts to new ways of working, offering its employees an environment designed to inspire personal development and stimulate creativity.

It is a true living space designed for concentration as well as exchange. Intended for moments of intense concentration as well as rest, the new Bolia headquarters responds to the quest for meaning, flexibility and freedom in today's working world. "It is about softening the fixed structures, letting brand values flourish, and bringing the inspiration and comfort of our homes into every corner of our workspace", explains PR and Communication Manager, Camilla Kallehauge Møller.

Bolia is making room for creativity, individuality and cross border teamwork, breaking down the closed department structure - marketing, sales, etc. - to give employees the opportunity to work together on "projects". The fixed and assigned work desk is disappearing: there are now more employees than work desks, which leaves room for telecommuting. "We have revolutionized our workspace, creating an inspiring space designed for creativity, flexibility, fun, conviviality and productivity," adds Camilla Kallehauge Møller.

New ways of working

This philosophy translates into open spaces illuminated by large windows allowing light to circulate freely. Multiple different workspaces are offered: large desks alone or to gather around a computer, wrap-around armchairs facing each other around a coffee table for small group discussions, and comfortable lounges that invite as much bonding as the emergence of new ideas and new projects. The two buildings follow a similar thread, except that the second one has a meeting room with surrounding plants, called the orangery.

Bolia thus frees itself from the fixed vision of work, and offers its staff space, both literally and figuratively.
