As part of its Spring-Summer 2026 collection, BOLIA expands its dining universe with two new designs: the Kuma dining table and the Bowie dining chair. Staying true to its New Scandinavian Design philosophy, the Danish brand continues to create pieces where functionality, aesthetics and durability come together to enhance both everyday living and special occasions.

Conceived as the heart of the home, the dining room becomes a space where memories are made, and conversations unfold. With these two new pieces, BOLIA celebrates the art of gathering through a thoughtful approach to design, centred on comfort, flexibility and longevity.

Designed by Glismand & Rüdiger, the Kuma dining table embodies a spirit of togetherness. Its timeless design and clever construction allow it to seat up to 20 guests when fully extended, making it ideal for both everyday meals and larger gatherings. Kuma reflects the brand's commitment to responsible materials and enduring craftsmanship. Every detail is carefully considered, balancing strength, functionality, and quiet luxury to support decades of shared moments.

Alongside it, the Bowie dining chair, designed by Skrivo, enhances this sense of conviviality. With its sculptural solid oak frame and generous comfort, it welcomes long dinners and lingering conversations. Its soft seat and changeable, washable covers reflect a more responsible and adaptable approach to design – allowing interiors to evolve over time and last for generations.

Together, Kuma and Bowie form a harmonious pairing where natural materials meet soft, organic lines – reflecting BOLIA's vision of designs made to be lived with, shaped by their surroundings, and passed on through generations.

As part of a wider collection, these pieces highlight carefully selected materials, refined textures and warm tones, creating interiors that feel both contemporary and enduring.

Now available online and in stores, the Kuma table and Bowie chair invite a renewed appreciation for gathering around thoughtful, lasting design.
